
An Importance Of Our Failures

The lessons we take from obstacles we encounter can be fundamental to later success.

Admitting to a mistake can be the worst feeling ever as recognizing the mistake itself is a problem. However, people can only learn from a mistake after admitting to making the mistake. It takes a lot of courage to stand up and admit to a mistake that may be a barrier or challenge to our personal growth. Unlike roadblocks that make people stuck on their projects, setbacks just slow down the momentum that humans have to complete their tasks. In spite of the fact that they slow down our processes, challenges make humans progress harder as it is the nature of humans to bounce back from the issues and put in a lot of efforts.

An example of a setback I experienced some time back was the project that was slated to commence strictly on Tuesday but for some reasons, it could not start until Wednesday. The change in the project's dates was not a huge deal but it forced me to scramble a bit as I tried to make the required schedule changes so that things could be in place again. I also had to make schedule changes so that people could be comfortable with the new time that I had to set for the project. The project was part of my coursework that was done in groups of five students. Not being able to start the project on the scheduled date made me feel bad for inconveniencing my group members who had relied on my guidance as the group leader. The frustrations, negative reactions and feelings were essential in helping me get what I wanted for the group as I was scared to fail the group work once more.

From the setback I experienced, I learnt to admit that setbacks are failures that are inevitable in life. From the mistake, it was clear that no one is perfect and everybody falls on hard times at one point in life. Living perfectly without challenges does not give us the opportunity to solve setbacks whenever they may occur. From the experience, I accepted that failure is part of the process of development; hence the need to stay positive. From the setback I experienced, it was clear that positive thinking is used so that we can learn, grow, and evolve from the challenges we have experienced. From the experience, it was significant to learn that being upset and disappointed is part of life. Nonetheless, the difficulties we experience are a stepping stone in the journey to getting what we desire.

The setback I experienced was a chance to let out my frustrations in life as I took some time to walk it out and clear my head. I had to accept what happened and be brutally honest with everybody around me. I did not make the mistake of failing to confront the mistake that I had made. The setback was rather an opportunity to make the necessary adjustments to succeed. It was an opportunity to learn how to handle setbacks whenever they occur in life. It was important to learn that setbacks may block our vision temporarily, but perseverance leads to the discovery of opportunities that seem to be hidden on the other side of the challenge. Getting more efficient is a chance to see the positive side during the toughest times.

Need help with the assignment?

Our professionals are ready to assist with any writing!

GET HELP

gradesfixer.com

Need help with the assignment?

Our professionals are ready to assist with any writing!

GET HELP