Future of the Marvel Cinematic Universe after Disney buys Fox

The deal between Disney and 21st Century Fox is officially done after Disney purchased more than 71 billion dollars. From this merger, many fans are already imagining what MCU would do with Fox's assets. It means such big things for the Marvel Studio, one of subsidiaries of Disney, which has a chance to take the original superheros characters back from Fox. Also, will Disney take this advantage to do something new with their film industry?

To begin with, Fox Marvel characters are coming home. In the early 90s, Marvel was facing financial troubles and sold the movie rights to other companies in order to save their studio. Even though Fox already managed to do the story quite well in their own style, Marvel could do it better in their original style. Marvel has planned to remake and release Fantastic Four TV series within few years. Next, Marvel studios is grabbing the chance to explore more new themes of Marvel's movies. Most of films themes are not serious and comedic in order to target every age. Unprecedentedly, MCU is going darker places. They are aiming to create films more serious. Also, Disney will keep continuing to develop and release their R-rated Fox properties. Thus, the Deadpool franchise will remain R-rated, stated by Disney CEO Bob Iger. Similarly example, Logan, it is a superhero movie doesn't mean it's for kids. Logan is officially received R rating for strong brutal violence and language throughout, and for brief nudity. Other, The New Mutants is an upcoming horror film in the superhero genre, based on the Marvel Comics. This theme is new for Walt Disney.

On the other hand, as a result of this merger, it could affect movie industry and Fox's employees negatively. Firstly, Disney step forward to a movie monopoly. Subsidiary of Disney is not only Marvel studios but also own many both films and TV shows companies such as Lucasfilm and Pixar. Disney has rights over one third of the movie industry.
