Persuasive Essay Against Death Penalty: Why It Should Be Abolished

Every year there is a human life taken through the government's permission with the death penalty. What defines inhumane, psychotic, or barbaric? Eventually, the line must be drawn somewhere, but where? Mistakes are made all over the world, but is someone's life worth a mistake? Just because a life is being taken, does not mean it is free of cost. The United States government spends a great amount of money to go through such dramatic actions. The Government is supposed to protect American lives, not authorize to take them under any circumstances. This persuasive essay against death penalty will explain how such actions are intolerable, the cost, and why it should be abolished.

When you think of death, you think of a car accident or maybe a long-term illness; but that is not always the case. There are many different occasions the government is granted the power to take another human's life. The opportunity is very court ruled and goes through many steps and processes for approval through the Supreme Court. The choice is a long process just to take someone else's life. The fact that someone else's is being taken through certain rules, is insane. The different methods of execution include gas chamber, electrocution, and lethal injection being used the most. There have been occasions where the occurrence has gone very wrong. Can you just imagine your loved one making a mistake costing their life forcing you to have to watch their death?

When people have conversation about the death penalty, everything is being taken into consideration except the cost. Besides their lives being taken, it does cost more than money. It costs time and hurt being distributed to the prisoner and their family. Also, the time being spent adds on to the dollar amount with the waiting period for the death row inmate. It is stated the death penalty can contain racism which is a completely biased excuse to kill someone. With that being said, unless there is dramatic evidence there is still a possibility the killing of someone can possibly be innocent. It has been documented countless times that innocent people have been sentenced to death. Many states have abolished the death penalty and have resorted to life sentences, which would be more humanely correct.

What other reasons would it take to completely prove with facts that taking someone's life is completely unacceptable, especially by a governing body. There are many examples stated in the reading of why the death penalty has been abolished. It is claimed the movements come to a halt because of the dramatic indifferences between the public. It all comes down to the government deciding the fate no matter what, because the government has money and control.

There are many arguments against capital punishment, one of the most given is the living breathing emotions of another human being. Many claim they are against death penalty to reduce the body count, but it comes down to having consideration for another breathing human being. The court is taking the time and money to determine if someone lives or dies for crimes they could or could not have committed. There is a misconception of the problem being gone, but with one problem leads to another. Family, friends, and loved ones of the death row prisoner are left broken, due to a loved one being stolen. There are sanction's for civilians kidnapping and murdering, so why isn't there one for governing body's?

In conclusion, it shouldn't be a tough decision to do the right choice. The situation should be equivalent and not dramatically different. The government should be able to dictate so much over someone's life, the facts should be presented. First off, the question if another human beings' life is worth taken should be questioned before anything else. The process and cost should be acknowledged and determined if it is worth it to even continue. The sanity of supporters should be questioned, because the support of this is crazy. These are some of the many great reasons arguments against death penalty and reasons it should be abolished.
